Newsom visits Big Sur, warns of disasters to come

Covid researchers want your blood ... and will pay for it

By KELLY NIX

IF A letter arrives asking you to answer some Covid-19-related questions and submit a finger-prick blood test to determine if you have antibodies for the virus, don't toss it in the trash — you're among a select few chosen to participate in an important new study.

Monterey County Health officer Dr. Ed Moreno announced Tuesday at the board of supervisors meeting that the county is one of only seven in California chosen to take part in a study, called CalScope, which seeks to determine how many people are immune to coronavirus, either through infection or vaccination.

"They want to learn about Covid-19 prevalence by demographics, such as age, race, ethnicity and by region," Moreno told reporters during a press briefing Wednesday.

The study is run by the California Department of Public Health and Stanford University.

Gift cards

County residents chosen to participate will be asked to fill out a roughly 20-minute online survey on "basic information about you and your household, as well as your activities and medical history," the CalScope website says. They will also be asked if they would like to receive a free

Ire over omission of Asians in race resolution

By KELLY NIX

A BOARD member and former president of the country's oldest and largest Asian American civil rights organization said the Monterey County Board of Supervisors "promoted systemic racism" when they approved an "anti-racism" resolution earlier this month that failed to include any mention of people of Asian heritage.

In an April 6 resolution declaring "racism a public health crisis," the supervisors said racism against Black and Latino people "creates disparate outcomes in many areas of life," including in housing, education, employment and physical and behavioral health.

'Marginalized'

But despite several documented verbal assaults on people of Asian heritage in Monterey County in the past year — three of them in the Monterey Peninsula — there was no mention of the group in the resolution.

Asked about the omissions last week, Monterey County

Mascot supported by CHS students, staff and alums

■ Poll: 62 percent want him to stay

By MARY SCHLEY

THE PADRE should remain Carmel High School's mascot, according to survey results released by CHS principal Jonathan Lyons. The survey is part of an extensive process the school is undertaking to decide whether the mascot — a caricature of one of the Spaniards who founded the California Missions system and helped establish towns throughout the West in the 1700s — should stay or go.

The issue arose last summer after an online petition asked for the change, saying "it is time for Californians to reappraise our history and the figures we take pride in" because of the "unjust and shameful treatment of California Indians" by European settlers.

'Remain the Padres'

But in the online poll, 62.1 percent of respondents said the school should "remain the Padres," with 37.9 percent wanting a new mascot. Of those who answered, just over 53 percent were age 46 and older, while people 30 and under accounted for 32 percent, with the balance in the 31-45 age group.

The 405 students who responded were narrowly in favor of keeping the mascot, 52 percent to 48 percent.

School staff, including teachers, supported the Padre a little more, with 54 percent voting to retain the Padre and 46 percent voting to replace him. Parents also favored keeping the Padre, 60 percent to 40 percent, with 378 people responding.

The most well-represented group in the poll was alumni, with 779 graduates taking the time to answer the questions, and perhaps not surprisingly, 70 percent of them voting in favor of keeping the Padre. And "community members" — presumably people who have no direct connection to the school — also voted in favor of keeping the 80-year-old mascot by a margin of 64 percent to 36 percent.

When asked to select from a number of "influencing factors" on their answers, the majority — 1,005 people — picked "long-standing tradition," with "important part of the pride of alumni" coming in second at 725, and "I like the current mascot," the third most common reason, with 666 votes. Of the negative factors, "oppression of a minority" got the most, 523, followed by "mascot is a religious symbol," with 484, and "symbolizes colonization," at 466. The least common reason was the fact that other schools have changed theirs, which only influenced 169 people.

In the words-people-associate-with-the-mascot section, the most frequent answer, with 670 people choosing it, was

PLANNING COMMISSION SENDS PASTOR'S 'PIT' DESIGN BACK TO DRAWING BOARD

By CHRIS COUNTS

AFTER THE planning commission weighed in Wednesday on developer Patrice Pastor's proposal to build a complex with 12 apartments and 15 shops at what's become known as The Pit, and a handful of former town officials made comments, one thing was abundantly clear: The plan for what is being called Ulrika Plaza has to go back to the drawing board.

"The message to the developer is that this project needs to be redesigned," said the chair of the planning commission, Michael LePage.

LePage and others spoke out on Pastor's plan during the online workshop. Architect Henry Ruhnke kicked off the event by reporting that an "overwhelming number" of comments he has received about the design have been positive, and he called it "appropriate and sensitive to Carmel."

Ruhnke described Pastor as a "great developer" who is taking over a "very challenging project," and has enough resources "so no expense will be spared."

The architect also noted that Pastor's proposal is smaller in scale than a previous plan by one-time property owners Bob Leidig and Michael Draper, which fell apart more than two years ago when they couldn't get funding.

'Conflicting styles'

The design combines Tudor and Mediterranean styles. Also proposed is a rooftop deck, along with a lower-level gym and garage with 27 parking spaces. The site, located at Dolores and Fifth, measures 16,000 square feet.

But former town planning commissioner Don Goodhue dismissed the design.

"It's two conflicting styles," Goodhue said. "It's a

Unfulfilled romance, a mysterious rose, or just ‘bunk’ — you decide

LAST WEEK, I briefly mentioned that artist Francis McComas had lived in Monterey's Casa Bonifacio, also known as the Sherman Rose Adobe. A century ago, the legend of Señorita Maria Ygnacia Bonifacio and the Sherman Rose was well known, and her adobe was one of the most legend of the rose was true, others insisted it was not. Regardless, the story was so well known that Casa Bonifacio became one of the most visited of Monterey's adobes in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Bonifacio, who never learned English, could not understand most of the questions from her unknown visitors, but never refused requests to take pictures with her and the famous rose. She and the legend appeared in newspapers across the country. I've even found an account of the legend in England's Manchester Weekly of 1893.

popular stops in historic Monterey.

The lovely señorita lived in a home on the east side of Alvarado Street where Bonifacio Street and the Mechanics bank are today. Her home was a two-story adobe structure on a large lot that included other buildings, such as "a pantry and a kitchen with a wooden roof, a privy and a water well."

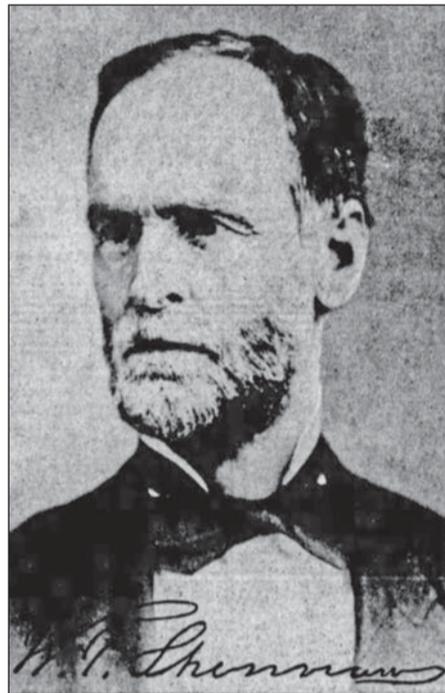

Soon after the United States claimed California as a possession in 1846, Lt. William Tecumseh Sherman was assigned to Monterey. He sailed from New York, around the Cape, and arrived on Jan. 28, 1847. His Monterey headquarters still exist, next to the Larkin House on Calle Principal between Jefferson and Madison. Sherman was a young and free-spirited officer, age 26. Maria Bonifacio was 16.

Never returned

According to the legend, during his brief two years in Monterey, Sherman and Bonifacio fell deeply in love. When he was recalled to Washington, D.C., he promised to come back for her. According to a widely believed legend, "in the moonlit garden he took a rose from her hair and, digging a little place beside the path with the point of his sword, planted it. 'Before that shall grow and bloom again,' he said, 'I will return for my beautiful bride.'"

The years passed. Bonifacio tended the rose as it grew and blossomed, and she remained unmarried. Sherman never returned for her. He instead married Eleanor Ewing on May 1, 1850 in Washington. Sherman and Ewing grew up together. He was 9 when his father died, leaving a widow with 11 children. The Ewing family took in Sherman as a favor to their family friends, and he grew up to become a famous Union general in the Civil War.

Some who knew Bonifacio insisted the

This autographed photo of General Sherman appeared in the May 28, 1916, San Francisco Examiner after it was discovered among the deceased Señorita Bonifacio's treasures.

Room for doubt comes from the earliest known publication of the legend. It came in the 1870s from the pen of Daniel O'Connell, a member of San Francisco's Bohemian Club, who was known to never let the truth get in the way of a good story. Regular readers of this column may recognize the name. O'Connell's poem of Monterey is engraved on the Bertold Monument in Bringing monsters into the light

AN IMAGINATIVE child has few places as versatile as a bed, the top of which could become a pirate ship, a magic carpet, a fort or a wrestling ring with great ease. The underside was equally useful as a place to avoid an annoying sibling, or a stalking parent on bath night.

But everything changed at bedtime, when the lights went out.

A year ago, when the coronavirus pan-demie nudged many of us into long-forgotten regions of our minds, Carmel artist Kimm Barnes batted away a few cobwebs to write and illustrate "What's Under Jack's Bed?" — an ominously entitled children's book about scary monster and a posse of courageous toys who come to life to help Jack on a great adventure.

book industry at the same time." Barnes' artistic style is liberally splashed with the brilliant, bright, acrylic colors, and his books are populated with the kind of wide-eyed characters that mesmerize children.

But the vast majority of his work has metaphorical messaging targeted toward a mature and thoughtful audience. Themes of his paintings can be ominous, hopeful, political, sad, optimistic, dark, or humorous, with titles like "Forces of Chaos," "3 Guns, 1 Bullet, 4 Dead," "Waiting for the Next Big Wave," "Currents of Love," and "Journey over Sorrow Mountain."

Carmel's Artists

By DENNIS TAYLOR

"I think you have to look at everything when you're trying to understand the world you live in," Barnes said. "I can't seem to paint a happy painting without also painting something that might be a bit dark. I need that balance."

A bucket-list goal

Some of his work has local flavor. A three-part series of renderings tells the mythical story that inspired Pacific Grove's famous Feast of Lanterns festival. Thirteen of his paintings have been made into greeting cards.

But the children's books are meant to have widespread appeal to anyone who ever had a fantastic dream or an unsettling nightmare as a kid.

A cathartic bearhug

"I never had a monster under my bed, but I can recall being afraid at night as a little kid," Barnes said. "I remember a very vivid dream that there was a bear in my bedroom. I was afraid until I walked over and gave him a hug. After that, I don't think I ever had another nightmare about an animal."

Barnes grew up in San Jose and Cupertino. His father spent more than 30 years as a production manager at a plant that made monosodium glutamate, and his mom was a homemaker who, when her children were grown, worked in the cafeteria at Cupertino High, Barnes' alma mater.

"My parents were Depression-era people, and going to art school was not something they thought was wise, to say the least," he said. "I ended up going to Cal Poly to study architecture — I guess to make everybody happy — but didn't graduate. At some point, I just decided it wasn't working for me."

In need of a job, Barnes began selling cars — his brother's business — and in 1975, he accepted an offer to manage a used-car dealership on the Monterey Peninsula.

"We had an aunt and uncle who lived on Franklin Street in Monterey, so we came here all the time when I was young. I can remember when Dennis The Menace Park opened," he said. "I loved it here, and this became a place where I always wanted to live."

Great teachers

At 36, Barnes opened Vista Advertising and Design, a successful agency that focused heavily on making retail television commercials, mostly for clients in the San Francisco Bay Area.

"It was a lot of work, like any business is when you're self-employed, but I really enjoyed it," he said. "I liked the people, I liked the atmosphere, I liked the creativity ...

everything about it."

Despite working with artists nearly every day, Barnes was in his mid-50s before he became focused on his own art, taking classes at Monterey Peninsula College in painting, drawing, figure-drawing, sculpture and ceramics.

"I took everything I could, and it was really good for me — something I had always wanted to do," he said. "The teachers were great, the facilities were reasonably good, and I started becoming really serious about it.

"Nowadays, I work every day if I can, even if only for a couple of hours," Barnes said. "People like to say, 'You're so lucky to have passion,' which is true, but making art also a lot of work. It's not like you're just sitting with a glass of chardonnay, pushing some paint around."

Barnes also sits proudly on the board of directors for Arts Habitat Inc., a grassroots organization formed in 1996, as Fort Ord was closing, to advocate for the building of low-cost live-work housing, along with day-use art studios, for local artists.

"Arts Habitat signed a contract with the county and a developer in the '90s, but the money never came through," he said. "It seems like we might be a bit closer now to making it all a reality, so we just keep working on it, going to meetings, keeping track of what's going on."

Two more books for kids?

The artist said he has at least two more children's books that he'd like to write and illustrate as his knowledge about the industry evolves.

"It's been an interesting voyage, just trying to figure out how it all works," said Barnes, who belongs to the Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators, an international organization with a local chapter extending from San Francisco to Carmel. "I've learned that probably 90 percent of the businesses in the industry belong to women, and I've found them to be very helpful."

Barnes and his husband, Ryotaro Umegaki, currently reside in a cottage he purchased more than 30 years ago in downtown Carmel-by-the-Sea, near Harrison Library.

Much of his artwork is marketed via word-of-mouth, he said, but it also is available through his website at kimbarnes.com.

Big Sur Lodge offers new workers $500 bonus, stipend for commute

IN BIG Sur — where housing is nonexistent for most, and workers face a long commute in the best of times — businesses have had so much trouble finding workers that one is offering a $500 signing bonus, along with a gas stipend to lessen the expense of the drive.

The Big Sur Lodge is hiring for many part- and full-time positions.

"We still have openings in all departments," Sonia Marie Martino of the Big Sur Lodge reported this week. "Head over to bigsurlodge.com and click 'careers.' It's a beautiful drive!"
